Wild

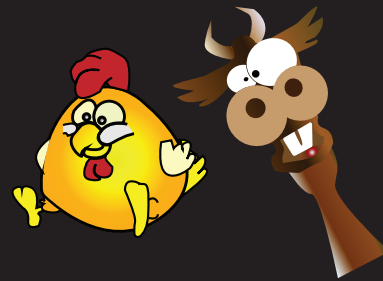

Taking the twenty first artist community by storm is Matthew Walker's first masterpiece "Le Chien Malodorant". Wielding a plethora of unmatched raw talent and diamond tipped execution the young prodigy blessed the world with his evocative and lifelike transformation of an ordinary dog. While the entire world sits contemplating what their dogs might look like if they were actually a lion Matthew got to work carefully crafting the postmodern miracle. While centered as a political commentary about the dangers and potential of China's unregulated genetic manipulation research the satirical conception was crafted so flawlessly it is widely considered one of the greatest stand alone pieces to date. While gazing into the depths of the genius many non-believers claim to have felt god for the first time.

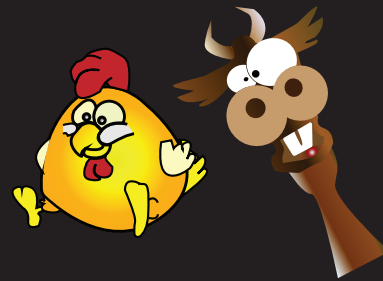

Wild Things

After what is widely agreed upon as the only true magnum opus is existence Instead of retiring upon his dynasty of greatness Matthew proceeded to elaborate. While most can merely view his first piece in awe Matthew was able to see beyond it. Using illustrator he was able to take his beyond human talents even further. Casting a larger shadow over the Mona Lisa is Matthew's second piece "Chien et amis". This digital masterpiece solved the one issue with Matthew's original work. Something as god like as a doglion will obviously begin to feel lonely among humans. But with foresight matching Kronos Matthew was able to foresee the doglions loneliness thus providing two elegant and jaw dropping friends. Many feel as though the still image comes to life with the grace and melodic personalities of the newest additions.

After epic but completely predictable success Matthew refocused his talents into reviving old masterpieces that had already seen their time come and go. While the world begged him to address various older works he eventually settled on remaking the 1897 masterpiece Dracula. To address the general populations growing ADHD he decided to shorten and compress the entire story into 10 seconds. A truly amazing accomplishment that many though was impossible despite the artists unmatched godlike gifts. However the doubters were quickly swept off their feet by the product. A true must see unnamed film feature film, recommended to all. It will likely be appearing in theatres everywhere soon.
